

Our Editors Share Their Fall Travel Plans and Packing Lists

Some of us are embracing shoulder season at the beach, while others are chasing autumn leaves.

Summer travel is out, fall travel is in. At least that's what I'm telling myself as I manifest a weeklong trip in the South of France for early Octobre. It would be a break from the office, but also an intentional sojourn, seeking inspiration for a new book I'm working on. Wouldn't it be wonderful to spend 63-degree afternoons people-watching along the seaside Promenade des Anglais in Nice in an easy-to-wear Todd Snyder sweater polo (perfect for shoulder-season travel) and oh-so-French Veja sneakers, of course—or exploring the Roman ruins of Arles, with pocket notebooks for my field notes and impromptu sketching? Though the sun sets earlier in the autumn, I won't forget to bring along some sunscreen, namely this lightweight SPF from La Roche-Posay; and I'll pack my go-anywhere Moncler zip-up sweater for chilly evenings. Though I plan to book an Airbnb with très cozy vibes, I might treat myself to a quick stay at a hotel I've had my eye on for a while, perhaps majestic Hôtel Crillon le Brave in the eponymous French small town, or chic Toile Blanche in Saint-Paul-de-Vence, the town where legendary American writer James Baldwin spent much of his later life. —Matt Ortile, associate editor
